If I but had a pincers on thy nose, Id maim thy carcase, or Id hold thee fast; See, like a porpoise how the rascal blows!--But the undying worm has thee at last, As to the fiercest hell thy spirit goes, --Virtues Bold Murderer, thou shalt there be classd, Where unto fiends thou mayst thy deeds rehearse, The meanest thing, that Heaven eer stoopd to curse! CLXXXIII. A forlorn hope, is coming, a recruit Of Satans, fresh from Bruners gambling hell! I rank these gamblers far beneath the brute, Although they do with human beings dwell; But tell them this, they will a fellow shoot--T was trying to secure them, fell! A posse of these thieves sometimes they catch, Make a nocturnal spree--a hanging match! CLXXXIV. Their fears occasionally do prevail, And they do smell--alias, dread the tar; And sometimes give their enemies...
