Extrait: . . . and to submit themselves to his government in good faith. Messieurs dHauteserre and de Simeuse are not willing to bear arms against France, now that events have taken their present course, he said, aloud; they have little sympathy, it is true, with the Imperial government, but they are just the men that your Majesty ought to conciliate. They will be satisfied to live on French soil and obey the laws. Then he laid before the Emperor a letter he had received from the brothers in which these sentiments were expressed. Anything so frank is likely to be sincere, said the Emperor, returning the letter and looking at Lebrun and Cambaceres. Have you any further objections he asked of Foueh and In j-our Majestys interests, replied the future minister of police, I ask to be allowed to inform these gentlemen of their reinstatement--when it is really granted, he added, in a louder tone. Very well, said Napoleon, noticing an anxious look on Fouches face. The matter did not seem positively decided when the Council rose; but it had the effect of putting into Napoleons mind a vague distrust of the four young men. Monsieur dHauteserre, believing that all was gained, wrote a letter announcing the good news. The family at Cinq-Cygne were therefore not surprised when, a few days later, Goulard came to inform the countess and Madame dHauteserre that they were to send the four gentlemen to Troyes, where the prefect would show them the decree reinstating...
